1. Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to devices for removing stacks of sheets from a production line in high speed production processing and the like, and more particularly to devices which automatically separate stacks of sheets such as webs from a continuous supply of such sheets by striking the stack with a vibrational force.

2. Description of the Prior Art The art of stacking webs, sheets and the like is very well developed and has been the subject of various patents. One example of such a patent is U.S. Pat. No. 3,929,358 which discloses a pair of reciprocating pusher fingers which align stacks of sheets of paper on a vibrational table at a feeder station. At the end of the feeder, the operator must then remove the stacks manually. The present invention relates generally to stackers or feeders of this type and more particularly to vibrational stackers of the aforescribed type. Such stackers employ vibrational means to separate stacks of sheets in high speed production processing. In U.S. Pat. No. 3,929,358, it is necessary to manually remove the sheet stacks from the feeder after the web has been separated and the stacks have been vibrated. The pile of sheets may be contained within stacks of conventional separators and the stacks of conventional separators may be removed by various means known in the art. However, as mentioned above, the stacks of sheets are not automatically removed by the present invention but instead a procedure which eliminates the need for an operator must be
