The determination of several biochemical parameters of cytolytic activity of the cells is important for the investigation of biological functions. For this reason, effects of presence of the blood lymphocytes from patients with blood malignancies on the biochemical parameters of cytolytic activity of the peripheral blood mononuclear cells from healthy donors were studied. The cytolytic activity was estimated with ^{51}Cr -chromium release assay in vitro. The effect of normal cells on the parameters of cytolytic activity of the normal peripheral blood mononuclear cells was observed in the case of interaction between the cell subpopulations of lymphocytes. The influence of malignant cells on the parameters of cytolytic activity of the mononuclear cells from healthy donors was observed only when their cytolytic activity is high. It is suggested that the alteration of cytolytic activity of normal and malignant cells, as well as their impairment of interactions with each other, are directly related to the changes in their biochemical characters during the development of cancer. The studies of biochemical properties of malignant cells can be an important aid to finding of peculiarities of their activity. New Zealand has the cheapest “ready to drink” beer in the world hip arthroplasty with the acetabular component removed:

an excellent medium-term outcome in a select group of patients with an infected total hip arthroplasty. Infection following a total hip arthroplasty (THA) is a serious complication that can adversely impact the outcome of the arthroplasty. Total hip revision, in this context, refers to a change in components, any soft tissue defects, the removal of the acetabular and femoral components, and insertion of an articulating acetabular component into the femoral head. A total hip revision entails the loss of the femoral component; however, the structural integrity of the acetabulum is maintained. This report details the clinical and radiological outcomes of a group of patients who had undergone a re-revision of an infected THA with the acetabular component removed (total hip revision THA).

The goal of this study is to critically assess the outcome of this procedure in a select group of patients. The study group consisted of 44 patients (39 female and 5 male), with an average age of 60 years (range, 36-79). The average follow-up was 7.1 years (range, 3-12.5). A total of 45 THAs had been performed, of which 25 were for oncologic disease and 20 for inflammatory disease. The mean interval between primary implantation and the development of peri-prosthetic infection and subsequent re-revision was 3.6 years (range, 0.5-15). The total hip revision THA was performed at an average interval of 4.7 years from the infection. The aetiologic diagnosis was a deep pyogenic infection in 23 patients, and a gram-negative infection in nine patients. The average time to implantation of the replacement was 2.2 years. The
